iproduct method'. The normal rate of interest varies from 2.7 per cent to 5 per annum. b) Recurring Deposit Account-This account is very useful for a large number of population. Everyone makes a programme for future needs, viz., purchasing a house, celebrating marriage or education for children. For example, Mr. 'X' wants to celebrate the marriage of his daughter, after say, 10 years and the expenditure he presumes is approx. 25 lakh. He will open recurring deposit account. In this account, a customer deposits some fixed amount every month for a period of one year to twenty years depending upon his needs. This account is also known as cumulative time deposit. This account helps people to develop the habit of savings. c) Fixed Deposit Account/Time Deposit/Long-term Deposit-In such accounts, a lump-sum amount is deposited for a specified time period which can range from fifteen days to five years. The rate of interest is maximum in this account because the banks can use this money without hesitation for giving loans to the needy person. This deposit can be withdrawn after the expiry of the period for which it has been made in the beginning. In case a customer wants money at an earlier date, banks give loan against the F.D. receipts. They will charge interest varying 1-2% on more than what is being given on F.D. 32. (a) Merits 1. Retained earnings is a permanent source of funds available to an organisation; II.
